Commentary

The Select International Alpha Fund returned +1.45% for the month to now be up +8.1% year to date, outperforming the index by +3.3%. Following recent strong performance, global markets consolidated as investors continue to digest the weekly global data flow for signs of improved inflation signals to better understand the interest rate outlook.

Markets continue to navigate the stubbornly high inflation outlook. Good signs continue via various data points that reinforce "goods" inflation continues to fall. However, the services portion of inflation remains too high for central bank policy makers. The tight labour market has effectively supported the services side of the economy and as a consequence, wage indicators have remained elevated and a concern for policy makers. Given the higher for longer inflation outlook, central bankers - led by The Fed - will continue to remain hawkish with their commentary. The alternative of tolerating higher inflation is very sub optimal for investors, the corporate sector and households. A delayed response to inflation implies a much higher unemployment rate, contracting economic conditions and negative earnings and credit conditions.

Economic conditions within China are on a different trajectory compared to other key economies. While the China re opening narrative has been mixed, the economic momentum continues to improve in aggregate. China domestic demand will continue to be a larger portion of China GDP. Further, the inflation rate in China is notably lower compared to most of the world allowing their central bank - The PBoC - to remain supportive and stimulatory. Concerns in China remain with regard to the property correction and finding a reasonable resolution. This includes some government and PBoC support for funding. While Beijing has worked to improve internal capital flow, the key concern is the ability for China to attract long term global capital. While some short-term investments are occurring, many global pension funds continue to lower their duration investments on mainland China. This has further supported the South-East Asian region and Europe as a notably alternative for investors.

The fund is managed by the GAM Investments global equity team who are based in Europe and the APAC region. Their active absolute global investment strategy is well placed to take advantage of any spike in global market volatility.
