Commentary

The K2 Asian Fund returned -3.52% for January. Over the long term the fund has delivered +8.28% p.a. over 22 years (after all fees).

Following a strong end to 2021, Asian equity markets started the new year full of renewed optimism. This was quickly short lived as investors fretted about inflation and how central bankers would react. Discount rates were rapidly recalibrated and markets de-rated accordingly. All major regions suffered varying degrees of losses with Materials and Energy the only sector spared. Korea (-10.6%) and Mainland China (-7.7%) bore the brunt of the selling while Hong Kong (+1.7%) showed signs of a recovery, albeit off a low base.

Any good economic textbook will tell you that higher interest rates are needed to subdue inflation. However, life in the real world is not so straightforward and central bankers are acutely aware of the economic armageddon that will occur from even a slight increase in rates. While this is no doubt a problem of their own creation through years of loose monetary policy it is becoming increasingly difficult to tame the inflation beast without causing the associated collateral damage. In the US, bond futures are currently pricing four to five hikes in calendar year 2022 which we think is too aggressive.

Meanwhile, US Q1 reporting season is underway. From Netflix to Facebook, PayPal and Amazon amongst others the reaction to results has been truly remarkable. We took the opportunity to rotate into quality companies with superior long-term prospects that were sold off disproportionately on short-term news flow.

Commodity prices surged during the month. In particular, Iron ore rose 15% on the back of Chinese restocking demand ahead of Chinese New Year and Crude Oil continued to advance on tight supply concerns rising 17%. Core portfolio holdings BHP Group (+11.7%) and Rio Tinto (+11.4%) were major beneficiaries.

In-line with most risk assets the AUD sold off -2.8% to close the month at 0.7062. The fund is currently 89% hedged, providing capital protection against a rising AUD.

The fund remains fully invested with a focus on high quality companies. As markets begin to settle down we are well positioned to benefit.
